Am Sudhaus 3 | Neukölln

Wednesday to Sunday from 12noon to 6pm

The KINDL Center for Contemporary Art has opened its doors at the end of 2016 to be amongst Berlin's experimental art spaces. Housed in an old brewery, with large brewing vats still part of the decor, the ample space is set to host one-of-a-kind exhibitions. With a cute café and a massive structure to awe and inspire, this is yet another of those must-see places for art-lovers in Berlin.

The Hotel Oderberger is not only a beautifully appointed hotel in Prenzlauer Berg but also a magnet for swimmers as it has one of the most stunning pools in Berlin. I did not find any picture I could actually use to show the pool, but it is well worth paying the 6 euros for the privilege of being able to swim for two hours. Let me not forget to mention that the rooms are very comfortable and there is a bar and restaurant also worth passing by Oderbergerstrasse.

Berlin Food Stories is one of the most reliable and independent sources of information when it comes to Berlin's food scene.

Per Meurling, the man behind the site, has been eating his way around the city since 2012 and knows how to write a good review. As an excellent and ethic critic, he visits restaurants unannounced, pays for his meals and only after visiting the place a few times will he talk to the owners for a profile. Berlin Food Stories makes your mouth water and highlights the diverse food scene in the German capital. If you want more, book one of Per's Food Tours so he can personally show you around and have a look at the Calendar on the website to see where and when there will be culinary events while you are in Berlin. Guten appetit!

Monday to Friday from 12noon to 3pm and from 5:30pm to 9:30pm

Saturday closed

Sunday from 1pm to 9:30pm

The Tree restaurant has a very inconspicuous entrance. Once you walk in you will feel like having stepped into a garden or an actual tree, with branches, leaves and birds chirping away. The food is simple yet very inventive Chinese, focused on noodles, made in-house.

Yes, Buck & Breck is a great bar tucked into a small entrance by Doris Bistro. There is room for 14 patrons at the cozy bar and you may think the place is closed as you pass by. But do not be distraught, open the door and go in. Recommended by my friend Tom Lisboa.

BAR SAINT JEAN

Friday and Saturday from 9pm to 3am

Sunday from 7pm to 2am

Berlin's gay scene is very varied and not concentrated in any one area. The Bar Saint Jean in Mitte is a lively small place, with great drinks and music and a good looking young crowd. The owner, Johann, from France, has brought a bit of French spirit to Berlin. Easy and relaxed. Recommended by my friend Tom Lisboa.

JEWISH MUSEUM

Lindenstrasse 9-14 | Kreuzberg

Monday from 10am to 10pm

Tuesday to Sunday from 10am to 8pm

The Jewish Museum in Kreuzberg is a collection of buildings with permanent and temporary exhibitions celebrating Jewish culture and, more importantly, remembering the Holocaust and its implications for the Jews and Germany. The traditional entrance building stands in contrast to the Daniel Libeskind structure in the shape of a destroyed David Cross. Some parts of the museum elicit quite strong emotions such as the entrance to the Holocaust Tower.

Monday to Friday from 4pm to 11pm

Saturday and Sunday from 12noon

How many times have you heard of Tadjikistan? The former Soviet Republic was part of the Silk Route and for centuries trade caravans have passed through its roads. The Tadjik Tearoom is not only a nice place to have tea and delicacies from the exotic country but it also a place to learn more about its history and culture. In some evenings there are music presentations and story-telling sessions. Recommended by my friend Tom Lisboa.

Alexanderstrasse 7 | Mitte

Rooftop daily from 7pm (in Summer)

Dancefloor daily from 11pm (check website to see which party is being hosted)

House of Weekend is not a new venue but does not seem to go away from most people's list of favorites drinking and dancing hangouts in Berlin. The rooftop view, at sunset, is second-to-none, with the panoramic sight of Alexanderplatz, the Fernsehturm and the rest of the iconic Berlin's skyline. It is a lively place to go for a drink and warm up for when the dancefloor opens underneath. There are parties almost every day and the dancing goes undisturbed for hours. It is a place to enjoy the sunset and the sunrise in one single unforgettable night out. Recommended by my friend Tom Lisboa.

CHUTNIFY

Pflügerstrasse 25 | Neukölln | Indian with the older branch in Prenzlauer Berg

Tuesday to Sunday from 11am to 11pm

Chutnify is by no means a new restaurant since it has been operating with huge acclaim in Sredzkistrasse 43 in Prenzlauer Berg for quite a while. But the venue in burgeoning Neukölln is rather new and shows the success of the South Indian recipes. On hot days, start with a glass of Nimbu Pani, the lime scented water, before heading to the food, which is served in three levels of spices. Very nice place, colorful, as if you had stepped into a gate to India. If you enjoy new tastes and spices, please try it out!

Tuesday to Friday from 5pm to 12midnight

Saturday and Sunday from 12noon to 12midnight

BRLO brews great beer with a Berlin twist and you can find their bottles in many Berlin restaurants and shops. They have set up their own beer hall at Park am Gleisdreieck with several containers, making it a very cool place. You can sample their home-brewed beers and international labels either on tap or bottled.

Believe it or not, the city of Berlin is rebuilding a Prussian castle in full detail right in the middle of the city. The Schloss was partly destroyed during the Second World War and later razed to the ground by Communist East Germany to give place to one of the ugliest buildings Berlin ever had. Thanks to reunification and good taste, the asbestos infested Palast der Republik was razed and to fill the void left by it, one of Europe's largest cultural centers is being erected in its place. Nobody knows for sure what will the Humboldt Forum house, but the controversial construction site is there and soon a new old palace will emerge in the heart of Berlin.

AKOG, the acronym for A Kind of Guise is a "Made in Germany" brand that proves Deutschland's industry is not just made of cars, electric parts, heavy machinery and panzers. With very stylish yet trendy men's and women's wear, the brand has selected highly skilled manufactures in the land to produce with the best materials clothes Germans can wear with pride and style.

SCHÖNEBERG & CHARLOTTENBURG

CATEGORIES: City Areas, Neighborhoods

Get Directions: Schöneberg, Berlin, Germany

Both are rather wealthy neighborhoods with a local feel because they have not changed as much as the East since reunification. Charlottenburg is more lively due to its commercial areas of Kurfürstendamm, or simply KuDamm, Fasanenstrasse and Savignyplatz. The Schloss Charlottenburg is a must see. Schöneberg feels more residential and was the chosen area of Marlene Dietrich and David Bowie. Many gay bars are concentrated here, but cater to a mostly middle age demographic. Potsdamerstrasse is becoming a fashion hub.

Dinner

Tuesday to Saturday 6pm to 10pm

Bar opens daily from 6pm till late

Pauly Saal is for a special occasion, even if this special occasion is just a special moment with a special meal on any given day. The main dining room is beautiful. The garden is a good choice for summer days and the bar makes you feel at home (a very nice home, needless to say). On the expensive side, the menu focuses on few but very well prepared dishes and you can choose how many courses you would like. One of my Berlin gems.

Iceland is trendy and Dóttir is a new representative of the island's culture in Berlin. The star-chef Victoria Eliassdóttir, the half-sister of superstar artist Olafur Eliasson, cooks beautifully presented dishes. The focus is on local ingredients and simplicity, the main focus being the food on the plate. Great for fish lovers who don't mind a short menu and are open to eating a bit of everything. Moreover, the restaurant, bar and ambiance are of extremely good taste. Book in advance.

BERLIN BY FERNANDA VIANA DIAS

CATEGORIES: Friends in Town

Get Directions: Berlin, Germany

I am from Curitiba, Brazil, and Berlin, to me, means freedom in its purest form. I have lived here since 2012 and still totally I am completely in love with the city. In the capital of Germany I can do the things I love, I can have a cool, simple, unpretentious lifestyle and I feel safe – no matter what time of the day it is.

There are lots of amazing free music concerts throughout the year – even during (my lunchtime!) in Winter. My next attendance (I'm looking forward to it) will be at the Berliner Philharmoniker.

I love to dance. Berlin is the capital of techno and (how very lucky!) I am a techno fan. No big surprise that Berghain is, of course, my favorite club. Although, I must say, that my favorite beach club will always be Warung in Southern Brazil.

Happy-hours: During Summer, Spring, Fall and on weekdays I like to go to Club der Visionäre – usually after work. It's where I catch up with friends and where I listen to good electronic music. It's a small venue that has two bars and a – little, but charming – dance floor by the canal in Kreuzberg. For good wine and tasty drinks I go to ORA, an old pharmacy converted into a bar in Oranienplatz.

In Berlin you can enjoy nature and still be at Europe's hot-spot. During Summer I love to go for a swim by bike or by train in the lakes nearby. Liepnitzsee is one of my dearests.

Berlin is a beating heart.

Berlin is anarchy, Berlin is living History.

Another interesting tour – where I've already been twice – is the Sammlung-Boros Bunker.

Another idea to discover some of Berlin's unique history is a tour to Teufelsberg.

Berlin is art.

I live in Mitte and whenever I have the chance I go for a walk along Auguststraße to see what's new in the many art galleries near my home. When it comes to bigger exhibitions I always check the Hamburger Bahnhof or the Martin-Gropius-Bau –, especially for Contemporary Art.

In multicultural Berlin you can eat incredible food from around the world and – what's best – for very reasonable and inviting prices.

My Lieblingsrestaurants are:

Mädchenitaliener – Divine Italian food.

Dudu – Delicious minimalist Japanese fusion cuisine. My tip is "Sushi for Two" – you can taste an interesting mix of the house's specialties, for two people.

Altberliner – Wonderful German food in a sweet location, the Arkonaplatz.

For a quick and lovely breakfast I usually go to Oliv Cafe, in Mitte.

A must see in every Spring... The cherry blossoms at the 'Japanischer Garten' in the Erholungspark-Marzahn...

I feel inspired.

When the sun comes up and when the sun goes down (and if I'm not working) you can find me at the Volkspark am Weinberg, happily enjoying Berlin's blue skies and having an ice-cream from Süße Sünde.

I am in love with movies and starting in May the Open-Air Cinemas like Freiluftkino-Kreuzberg are also on the list of my favorite programs.

Mit Liebe,

Fer

The temple of techno is a destination in itself. Waiting in line for hours, getting through the strange door policy, being part of the human mass dancing the night away is one of the highlights of any trip to Berlin. Wear black, no labels, no groups, no selfies but be prepared for a night to remember. The music is amazing, the variety of people inside astonishing, just let go and you will leave transformed.

KREUZBERG

CATEGORIES: City Areas, Neighborhoods

This is Berlin's happening neighborhood, where young crowds from all over the world come to have fun. The very trendy and multicultural area can be quite gritty at times, but once you get used, you start loving it. Known for its vast Turkish-descendant population (what explains the many kebab shops and Turkish supermarkets), it is quickly gentrifying. My favorite areas: Oranienstrasse, Paul-Linke-Ufer, Mariannenplatz and Arena (by the river).

Oooh, Berlin! was created by two Berlin lovers, Anika Oehme and Chris Foster. They compile information on what is opening up around the city and transform all of it into beautifully appointed free maps. These maps are available around Berlin and online. Their aim is to pinpoint locations that are hip, not targeted on those boring tourist maps you get on those obvious tourist locations. It is information overload, but better too much than too little, isn't it?

POTSDAM

The city of Berlin is a Bundesland (a German state) in itself, much like Hamburg and Bremen. However, it sits in the middle of the Brandenburg Bundesland, therefore the area is generally referred to as Berlin-Brandenburg. The capital of Brandenburg is Potsdam, easily accessible via S-Bahn (make sure you have a travel card to zone C). The city is a UNESCO World Heritage Site. On a sunny day, the visit to Potsdam is very nice. Best if you rent a bike at the station because all the castles and palaces are far from each other. Don't go if the weather is not nice or if you are tired.

To get there, simply take the S-Bahn. Just make sure your ticket is valid to zone C. The journey from Zoo Bahnhof takes around 30 minutes and trains depart regularly.

It can't get any cooler than staying in Mitte at the Soho House. An amazing historic building turned into an incredible place to stay. Creatives love it and the place's policies against mobile phones or selfies make it an oasis of privacy. To fully enjoy it, you must be a guest, or a member, but if you are just curious, like me, have a bite to eat at the Club Bar or the House Kitchen, serving great food and drinks all day long.

For timings, check the events page on Arena's Facebook

Arena Club, in a former boiler room near the Spree River in Kreuzberg, has a vast array of parties and events for a great night out (and days as well, as the dancing can go on for a whole weekend). It has kept the vibe of the early Berlin club culture, where techno was born, but has moved on to keep up with today's best DJs and music beats. Some of the parties held at Arena: Dystopian, Boiler Room, Grounded Theory, Ismus, Liber Null and 47.

After a full on night, you can soak up in a beach chair by Badeschiff to recover before heading home to sleep. Or just have a break at the pool before getting back into the club. All is possible in Berlin.

Daily from early till late (times vary according to the season)

Badeschiff is not just a swimming pool over the river Spree, where you can keep fit doing your laps. It is a party place where Berliners come to have a drink, soak up some sun and dance. The pool itself is open from May to September and for swimmers only, meaning, for those who want to swim laps, not just soak in the water. However, the area around the pool has been set up as if it were a beach, with sand, beach chairs and a bar. The whole area is called Arena and if you enjoy parties and nightlife, you better check Arena’s calendar of events.

All the horror of the Nazi time documented in a gruesome exhibition, that made me cry. Pictures of how Jews, gays or anyone against the regime was humiliated and how far the Nazi fever spread (Germany, Poland, Denmark, Italy...). The atmosphere is somber but well informative and worth the visit. On the outside, there is a large piece of the Berlin Wall and alongside it, another exhibit of the events that led to Hitler taking power.

In German, the place is called Topographie des Terrors. It sits on top of where the SS offices once stood. Incredible to think how so much horror could have been waged in Berlin.

My German friend Daniel Schwarz was the one who introduced me to Alex. We had the brunch buffet on a weekend and it was quite good. For a set price (EUR 12,20) you eat as much as you want from the buffet (eggs, bread, cheese, ham, jam, sausages, etc). Coffee and juice are ordered separately and not excellent, but ok for what you pay. The place is big, there is always a place to sit.

At Bötzw-Privat you feel like in a time capsule. I don't know why, but when I had a meal there it felt as if I were back in the 1970's. Maybe because of the wooden tables and the dark walls. Or maybe because it looks like Bavaria! Anyway, the food is good, focused on Brandenburg specialties. The beer is also excellent and the location could not be better. Worth a pit stop.

Quartier 206 is a world-class department store with all of those famous labels fashion victims crave for in an area of Mitte where there's upmarket hotels, bars, restaurants and shops. It is impressive, in its size and architecture as much as in the selection of brands in-house.

Friedrichstrasse was the frontier between East and West Berlin and there was not much in the area during the Wall years. So most of what you see now has been rebuilt to look like it was before the war. There is still a little bit of soul missing in the area as everything is too shiny, to proper. However, it is nice to see all sides of Berlin and if you enjoy brands and luxury, this is your address.

KaDeWe is a Berlin institution and short for Kaufhaus des Westens, or West's Department Store. It opened in 1907 as the first of its kind in Germany, showcasing goods from all around the world. It belonged to a Jewish family who was forced to sell the business by the Nazis. When the Wall came down, many East Berliner's headed straight to KaDeWe to marvel at its window displays and, more than anything, to see what was available at the incredible food halls.

The store is always changing and there are plans to transform part of its façade and interiors with a project by Rem Koolhaas architecture firm OMA. So there is always a good reason to visit. And remember, the food halls are still wonderful, even for those who did not live under Communism.

Bikini Berlin calls itself a "concept mall". Unlike a department store, Bikini goes more into fashion and creativity with some pop-up spaces along restaurants and stores such as Mykita, Vans and Kusmi Tea. At the end it is more or less the same, but in a cooler package. True that Bikini Berlin is a great piece of architecture, having been remodeled from an old 1950's structure.

There are cool brands, juice bars, cafés and one of Berlin's newest hip spots, the 25Hours Hotel, with Neni Restaurant and the Monkey Bar.

The huge glass window that separates Bikini from the Zoo is quite fun because you can just sit down and observe the monkeys come and go. There is a very convenient Kaiser's supermarket on the basement (open Monday to Saturday from 8am to 12midnight). You can take nice selfies with the Gedächtniskirche from up there. The Zoo Palast Cinema, where the Berlin Film Festival or Berlinale was held before it moved to Potsdamer Platz is also part of Bikini and if you have the chance to watch a movie there, do it, because it feels like going to an opera and not to the movies.

Mall of Berlin is the city's largest shopping center, featuring over 270 stores and restaurants in a magnificent glass enclosed piazza. Most international brands can be found here so be prepared for an overload. Remember that tourists living outside of the European Union can enjoy a tax refund on their shopping. I don't really like the mall, as I much prefer shopping on a high street but once in a while going to the mall can be a fun experience. Think of a rainy or snowy day, when the last thing you want is to get your shoes wet. Also during the sweltering days in August the aircon can be a blessing.

New exhibition on show from 3 May 2017

One of the most interesting private collections of Contemporary Art is set in a former Berlin Nazi bunker. The solid construction was built to serve as an air-raid shelter and its thick walls are almost indestructible. It was occupied by the Red Army at the end of WWII and used as a warehouse for many years, especially for fruit and vegetables imported from Cuba since the temperature inside was kept to a minimum by its concrete walls. East Berliners used to call it the Banana Bunker. In the time of the German reunification, when parts of the city were no-man's-land, the bunker was used for techno parties and raves, like The Last Days of Saigon. Andreas Gurski started his photographic career taking pictures of the crazy nights at the bunker.

In 2003, Christian Boros purchases the bunker and converts it into his home and a gallery to showcase his massive collection of art. They have tried destroying a few of the internal walls but had a hard time. So setting up an exhibition at Boros Bunker takes a very long time and the shows remain in place for years. Its first exhibition was from 2008 to 2012 and 120.000 visitors took 7.500 guided tours. The second show, from 2012 to 2016 attracted 200.000 people in 9.000 tours. A new collection is set to open in May 2017.

Make sure you book the guided tour in advance (in English or German). This is the only way to visit the collection and it is worth it because Contemporary Art does need some explaining and the eccentric history of the bunker is also told. Mr. and Mrs. Boros live on the top floor. If you are lucky enough you will meet them walking around. There are lots of works by artists currently living in Berlin, so it is a good place to get acquainted with the thriving local art scene and go visit the artist's studios thereafter.

GETTING AROUND BERLIN

CATEGORIES: City Areas, Getting Around

Get Directions: Washingtonplatz/Hauptbahnhof (Berlin), 10557 Berlin, Germany

The whole city is very well connected via public transport be it bus, tram, U-Bahn (subway/underground), S-Bahn (suburban trains), bike lanes and boats. Make sure you buy a travelcard valid for your whole stay. Remember that you must validate the card before boarding. The BVG app is a good tool to have on your mobile.

- Renting a bike is probably the best way to fully enjoy Berlin. The city is flat, there are bikers everywhere (even on sidewalks) and you don't need helmets (unless you want to be on the safe side). The trams have special carriages for bikers.

Bus lines 100 and 200 are great for sightseeing, especially if you are lucky enough to board a double-decker and sit right in front, on the upper level.

Uber works and it is worth downloading a good taxi app as well.

The quickest way to cross the city is via S-Bahn. All of the metropolitan lines going East-West do the same itinerary in central Berlin, from Ostbahnhof to Savignyplatz and vice-versa.

AIRPORTS

Once upon a time, Berlin had three airports. Tempelhof was turned into a park because it was too central. Tegel (TXL) is the busiest one nowadays, hardly coping with added traffic and holding there just because the brand new Berlin Brandenburg (BER) airport has not opened yet. Schönefeld (SXF) is also busy, very close to the new airport and a hub for low-cost airlines. From Tegel, you get into Mitte in less than 20 minutes. There is a bus going all the way to Alexanderplatz. A taxi ride will not break the bank. From Schönefeld the best way is to take the S-Bahn until you are in central Berlin, then change to a bus, taxi or U-Bahn.

FRIEDRICHSHAIN

Amid train tracks, old warehouses and derelict homes (it was too close to the Wall) you find a big chunk of Berlin's nightlife, specially the ultra-famous Berghain. Karl-Marx-Allee is quite an attractive Soviet-style boulevard and makes one feel in Moscow. The area is still under development and rents tend to be cheaper than in other central parts of town, so there is a good mix of creatives, families and foreigners. Warschauer Strasse station in the evenings is quite an attraction, with live music performances, lots of beer around and the promise of an amazing night out. To burn calories or recover from the previous night, the Volkspark Friedrichshain is a good option.

My favorite areas: Oberbaumbrücke, Karl-Marx-Allee and the RAW Gelände area.

TIERGARTEN

CATEGORIES: City Areas, Sights

Get Directions: Tiergarten, Berlin, Germany

The huge green area in the middle of the city is where you can go jogging, picnicking, reading a book or sunbathing. There is no way around it once you go from one side of the city to the other. You get great views of the green canopy from the top of the Reichstag, Neni Restaurant or while riding the S-Bahn from Friedrichstrasse to Zoo Bahnhof. Much of Germany's ultra-modern government buildings as well as the glass-box of Hauptbahnhof are in the north of the park. The simple yet touching Gay Holocaust Memorial is right across the street from the impressive (yet sad and disturbing) Memorial for the Murdered Jews of Europe.

BERLIN WALL

CATEGORIES: City Areas, Sights

Get Directions: Berlin Wall Memorial, Bernauer Str. 111, 13355 Berlin, Germany

Berliners hated the Wall very much. They were quick to destroy almost all of it in order to forget. There is a line that goes around town marking the ground where the Wall once stood. Specially in the Potsdamer Platz/Brandenburger Gate area it is crazy to see how divided the whole place once was. There are saved parts of it at the Topographie des Terrors, Gedenkstätte Berliner Mauer (Berlin Wall Memorial) and the East-Side Gallery. It is very interesting to remember that the division was also underground, meaning a few U-bahn lines started in the West, went through the East, before reaching the West again. There were many stations with blocked access and the Ghost Bahnhof exhibition at the Nordbahnhof shows exactly that. Quite impressive.

EAST VS WEST

CATEGORIES: City Areas, Getting Around

Get Directions: Berlin, Germany

The city has been trying to erase the East-West divide since 1989, but you can still feel the difference. West Berlin is richer and more "German", with wide avenues, clean sidewalks, bike lanes and a kind of "organized" feel. The East, in contrast, is more "messy". There is more graffiti, more abandoned areas, more young people walking around, trams, and a cool vibe like nowhere else. However, Berlin is changing quickly with lots of Eastern areas being gentrified and maybe, in a few years, the divide will be less obvious.

Areas in the West: Schöneberg, Charlottenburg, Wilmersdorf, Kreuzberg, Neukölln, Tempelhof, Steglitz, Wedding, Spandau.

Areas in the East: Prenzlauer Berg, Friedrichshain, Lichtenberg, Treptow, Weissensee.

PRENZLAUER BERG

CATEGORIES: City Areas, Neighborhoods

Get Directions: Prenzlauer Berg, Berlin, Germany

Caught in between left-wing artists and young-preppy Bavarian families, this is a fast-changing neighborhood, where, among new home developments, you can still find alternative theaters and bookshops. There are some wide cobblestone streets with impressive façades, the Altbau, best explored by bike. Kastanienallee is worth walking up and down. Kollwitzplatz is a nice area for brunch (expect baby stroller bottlenecks on weekends). Kulturbrauerei has cinemas, events and food trucks.

Mauerpark on weekends is a must, when there is the flea market.

My favorite areas: Volkspark am Weinbergsweg, Kastanienallee, Kulturbrauerei, Eberwalderstrasse U-Bahn.

MITTE

Get Directions: Mitte, Berlin, Germany

The Middle, that's it. The heart of Berlin is where most of the sights are, so booking a hotel in the area is a good choice. Mitte, however, is rather vast and there are quite a variety of zones within it. From the super touristy Friedrichstrasse, where you find Checkpoint Charlie, the Brandenburger Gate and fashionable stores, to trendy Auguststrasse and Torstrasse, at the Prenzlauer Berg border, to the always busy Hackescher Markt and, last but not least, to Soviet-style Alexanderplatz. The rule is, the further East you go, the better it gets.

My favorite areas: Alte and Neue Schönhauser Strasse, Auguststrasse + Tucholskystrasse, Torstrasse + Rosenthalerstrasse, Montbijoupark + Museum Island.

Weinbergsweg 1a | Prenzlauer Berg

Quite an unbeatable place to stay in the budget category for its location, a variety of options of rooms (dorms, private, suites) and social areas, with its own microbrewery and the all-you-can-eat breakfast buffet, perfect to binge on after a night of clubbing, or before heading to the city's main sights. Great place to socialize if you are traveling on your own. They organize several activities and tours of Berlin for guests and non-guests.

If you want a bit more comfort, try booking a room at their Circus Hotel, a block away, at Rosenthalerstrasse 1. If you want a long-term place to stay, with apartments up to 6 people, try the Circus Apartments, also in the area, at Chorinerstrasse 84.

Warschauerstrasse 39-40 | Friedrichshain

Right at the nerve center of Berlin's nightlife and party area, the Michelberger offers comfy rooms, a nice restaurant and a cool lounge area within easy access to the hotspots in Friedrichshain and Kreuzberg. They also have a brand of coconut water with a little monkey logo. Good parties and great times await those who pass by.

Location, location, location. This small and beautiful hotel is at the epicenter of happening Mitte. All rooms have street view. The Dos Palillos restaurant on the ground floor is excellent and open to non-guests, however, the nice Tentempié, on the rooftop, is where guests, and guests only, enjoy complimentary breakfast, drinks and snacks 24-hours a day.

Hardenbergstrasse 28 | Charlottenburg

Its location is not perfect (I much prefer East Berlin), but if you have to stay in West Berlin, this is the place to be. It is new and beautiful and because of its height, rooms have amazing views of the city's flat skyline. Good for shopping at Bikini Berlin, KaDeWe and the famous Ku'damm. Zoo Bahnhof is just across the street, so in a few minutes with the S-Bahn you get to Alexanderplatz.

It is possible to book a studio tour via tours@studiosbabelsberg.com however, they can only be in German. You can take someone who speaks German to act as a translator.

Berlin has always been an important center for movie production. In 2012 it celebrated 100 years. Many classic movies such as Metropolis were produced at the studios. Once the Nazis took power and the war began, a big chunk of the talent pool migrated to Hollywood but films were still produced as part of the war effort and propaganda.

Today Babelsberg and Hollywood have an agreement to co-produce movies keeping the industry as an important source for jobs in Berlin. You can visit the studios and the backstage areas.

For families, there is a theme park called Filmpark Babelsberg nearby with attractions, rides and fun.

SUPERGUIDE BERLIN

If what you are looking for in Berlin is discovering the coolest and best stores, you need to carry around the Superguide Berlin. It is a pdf guide you buy online, download, print and assemble yourself with a stapler. It is updated regularly, has the city divided into neighborhoods focusing on shopping, but with some great restaurant and bar tips.

BERLIN BÜHNEN

Berlin Bühnen, or, in English, Stages of Berlin, concentrates in one website all of Berlin's cultural events. The offer is staggering. There are plays, workshops, musicals, dance, classical music, concerts, experimental theater, mainstream, you name it. However, at the site you can more or less organize all of that info and check what will be on stage during your stay in the city and even buy tickets online. Enjoy the show!
